Hollow Log Protected Him In Custer Massacre, He Reveals

JOLIET, III.—For years it has been stated that no white man survived the battle of the Little Big Horn, in which Custer and his command were massacred by Indians. But a Joliet man, once a soldier and now a retired farmer, says this isn't true.

By hiding in a hollow log during the battle, he explained, he lived to tell the story.

All of the soldiers under Custer were supposed to have been killed in the famous attack by the Sioux and Cheyennes on June 25, 1876. Spencer enlisted Dec. 20, 1875, at Fort Snelling, Minn., and was assigned to Custer's command. He narrates a thrilling story of the massacre. As the circle of Indians grew narrower, he says, he saw there was no escape, and crawled into a hollow log in a thicket and was overlooked by the Redskins.

The battle over, and the Indians gone, he wandered and was later given attention by friendly Crow Indians. They carried him to a hospital in Miles City, Mont., where he was nursed back to health.

Spencer says he has documents to prove his statements. He served in the army until 1890 and then began farming.

—when you consider how important they are in the bathroom!

If there is no toothbrush holder, brushes are never in the same place. If there is no glass holder, the glass is always getting broken. If cheap accessories are used—the kind that rust and corrode soon after purchase—linen and walls soon become stained.

Modern, white bathroom "Jewelry" makes the bathroom attractive and comfortable. The added convenience of having "a place for everything and everything in its place" can be had at moderate cost.

Visit our sales room and see how easily and inexpensively you may have the bathroom "Jewelry" that will complete your bathroom.
